We have a sample of herdsgrass, five feet and three inches tall, that grew on the farm of Arthur Noyes in Greenwood. They have a good-sized piece of it. Uncle Isaac says "It shows what the strong democratic land of Greenwood will do." It's tall grass, anyhow, and it would be heavy to swing a scythe through it, as in olden times they did, but now they use a machine and the horse does the hard work. Great changes since Uncle Isaac and yours truly were boys.

Mrs. Mary A. Andrews.

Mary, widow of the late Hon. E. C. Andrews of Norway, died at her home in Concord Junction, Mass., Monday July 7.

She was born in Otisfield in 1821 and was a member of the Haskell family found throughout the northern part of Cumberland county.

Files of Station 5, Boston. She has made her home with these daughters, mostly at Concord, and was very much beloved by those who knew her.

Considerable tragedy had come into her life as two daughters died from diphtheria, two sons were accidentally drowned and her husband was killed as the result of an accident, but she bore it all with a strong Christian faith.

The remains were taken to Otisfield Gore, Thursday, and laid beside her husband there.

Horace L. Cleaveland.

It was with surprise that the people of Norway and vicinity learned of Mr. Cleaveland's death, which occurred in East Otisfield, Sunday morning about five o'clock. Mr. Cleaveland was the oldest son of Cornelius and Melinda E. Cleaveland and was born in East Otisfield, Oct. 4, 1863.

He married about 12 years ago May Bisbee, daughter of Mrs. Lucinda Holmes of Bisbeetown, Waterford, a niece of Aaron Paige of this place, and she with four children, the oldest 10 years old, survive.

Mr. Cleaveland was well known here, as he began to live here about 18 years ago, and has worked for J. O. Crooker and Wm. C. Leavitt of Norway and J. P. Richardson of South Paris, also being employed by Norway photographers and by the electric road.

About three weeks ago he moved from South Paris where he had spent the winter to the Ben Stone place in East Otisfield. All was done that could be done but too late, and he died from urinary blood poisoning, Sunday morning, as stated.

Funeral services were held, Tuesday afternoon, in the Free Baptist meeting house at East Otisfield, by Rev. C. C. Foster. The floral tributes were many and beautiful. Interment in the cemetery near the church.

Hadfield Stock Company.

The Hadfield Stock Company opened at Town Hall, Waterville, July 10, with "A Western Romance," to a good-sized audience. Manager "Sam" Chase says that it is one of the best repertoire companies he has ever played here, and the audience seemed to agree with him, as not a person left the hall until the performance closed at nearly half past eleven.

The work of the cast was excellent throughout, Miss Hadfield, as Susanna, doing especially well. The little people, Count and Baron Magri and Mrs. General Tom Thumb, were the great attraction on account of their size, and their part in the performance was fully up to the standard set by the large people. The specialties were good, the boxing act between Count and Baron Magri keeping the audience in a continual roar of laughter.

Will appear at Norway Opera House for 3 nights, beginning Monday, July 21.

Improvements at Hills'.

Our "first optician," V. W. Hills, has had his store in a state of confusion for some weeks, but has now got straightened around and his shop looks fine. The partition has been moved back, giving a space for inspection of the eyes, with electric lights arranged to the best advantage. He has put in a roll top desk and several feet more of wall cases have been added, which will be used to hold photo supplies.

A well-equipped dark room is provided with the conveniences demanded for an up-to-date place of the sort, and he also has a work-room with expensive lathes, grinders, polishers and the like, run by a water motor, and having a large number of tools and supplies used in the repair business, many of which are new.

With the improvements, the store is nearly twice its former size, and the doing of business must be much facilitated.

THE PRESIDENT
Of the City Council Wilkesbarre, Pa., Cured of Rheumatism.

Col. Wm. J. Harvey, a president of Wilkesbarre's city council, who will long be remembered for his great work for the city, was once a mere physicial wreck, torn in every muscle and nerve from the frightful pains caused by rheumatism. He consulted the best physicians, went abroad, took mud baths, and almost every known treatment for the disease. One of the city official had had a very similar experience and Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy had cured him, so he recommended this great kidney medicine to his friend, and Col. Harvey is today a well man, hale and hearty. In his own abrupt way he states his case:

DR. DAVID KENNDY,
Dear Sir:—This is to certify that I was permanently cured of rheumatism by the use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy.
WM. J. HARVEY.

Nothing could be more direct or more to the point than this simple statement.

Rheumatism is but another name for uric acid poisoning which is caused primarily by diseased kidneys. Cure your kidneys and the rheumatism disappears.

For all diseases of the kidneys, liver, bladder and blood, rheumatism, dyspepsia and chronic constipation, as well as sickness peculiar to women, Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is unquestionably the greatest medicine known to the medical profession

All druggists sell Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy in the New 50 Cent Size and the regular $1.00 size bottles.

Samuel Junior.

Perhaps you never heard of me,
If so, I'll simply state
That to succeed your Uncle Sam
I am a candidate.

He's getting old and needs a rest,
He's worn with trusts and rings—
This country would be better off
With a young chap bossing things.

And now I'll tell you what I'll do
When I take up the reins:
The politicians shall give up
Their hoards of ill-got gains.

Then won't I make the money fly
And turn the sugar shops
To making loads of peppermints
And tons of chocolate drops.

I'll have schools keep one day a week,
The rest we'll go a-fishing
And leave the older men at home
Just sawing wood and wishing

That they could once be boys again
And have a little fun,
Perhaps they will be sorry, too,
For some things they have done.

There are lots of other things I'll do,
I can't tell all tonight,
But you can see when I am boss
All things will be set right.

So don't forget to vote for me
For I am just the man
To keep this country right side up
And rest tired Uncle Sam.

Harmony.

Have you not seen in the western sky
Just after a raging storm and wild
Where the dark clouds divided lie
A bit of of blue all calm and mild?

And how it cleared all doubt and fear,
Lightened the heart with joy and praise
To greet once more the glorious sun
And see the splendor of its rays?

So music, like a bit of heaven,
Thrills to the heart this common clay,
Raising the dark clouds from the mind,
And doubt and unrest flee away.

Soaring on eagle's wing the mind
Takes broader scope and clearer view;
And the sweet notes that blend and rise
Secure the heart and will anew.

Yes, music makes the mind sublime,
Above the sordid things of earth,
And in an ecstacy divine
The soul exults in heavenly birth.

Tis concord of harmonious tones
That makes the melody so sweet;
And 'tis sympathy in human mind
That makes this earth-life more complete.

Our Heavenly Home.

There's a beautiful home the Saviour shall give
Where his children in glory forever shall live,
That beautiful home is almost in sight,
The thought of that home fills me with delight.

The friends I shall meet that were dear to my heart.
When I enter that home we never shall part—
I long to meet with the saints over there
And be clothed with a robe the ransomed shall wear.

Where sin cannot enter and death is unknown,
In Eden so lovely, that beautiful home,
Lord, hasten the time when the saints shall greet
Their long parted friends together shall meet,

And mingle their voices with angels on high
In that beautiful home where they never shall die.
That beautiful home with its glory so rare,
The saints of all nations shall soon enter there.

Comrades of Life.

O, my comrades, in life's journey,
Are you battling for the right?
Are you beating back the darkness
Letting shine God's truth and light?

Soon will all our work be finished,
Soon our Captain we shall meet;
All our warfare then be ended,
And our comrades we shall greet.

Help us, Lord, to serve Thee faithful
As the days so quickly fly;
And when life with us is ended
Take us to our home on high.
Bethel, Me. ELLEN P. KIMBALL.

Bass Are Sulky.

When the days are cold and wet, especially when there has been a good deal of rain, black bass often lay back and sulk, obstinately refusing to take lures. They may be tried with minnows, frogs, grasshoppers or all of the various kinds of artificial baits, but they continue to lie sullenly, refusing even to nose the lures. It is under such circumstances that the skill or the resourceful angler shows itself and the right man will take some fish, though all others go day after day without a strike.

There is but one thing to do and that is to continue to try the bass with every form of bait within the reach of the angler. It often happens that some one thing will tempt them, and it is the business of the fisherman to search out and discover that one thing. One of the most trustworthy of the baits to be tried when all others have failed is the despised angleworm. They may be obtained without special trouble in any wet spot near a barn or out house. Taken in all there are but few better baits.

When bass refuse to bite they are generally loafing around lily pads. They are not hungry, are not cruising in search of food and in the whole of a day will not move more than 20 feet from the lairs they have chosen. The man who designs to woo them with worms should rig for himself the contrivances that in fisher's parlance is known as crazy bait. It consits merely of a couple of weedless hooks on snell a foot long.

They should be tied on a line some four inches apart. Neither sinker or spoon is used with them. When they strike the water and are reeled in one of them travels about six inches in front of the other and they rarely tangle. Selecting a spot where the water is deep and the lilies grow so close that their leaves almost touch, the angler anchors his boat and puts a half dozen big worms on each of the hooks. It is difficult to get much distance with this sort of bait as it lacks weight, but 30 feet will do admirably.

The cast having been made the line is reeled in slowly, pausing when the line is over any small open space. Bass have never seen angle worms swimming along in bunches, but they know that there is delicate and desirable meat within reach and they are apt to rise to it.

There is just enough of oddity, unreason and incongruity about this lure to make it successful when other lures which successfully imitate live bait have failed. The bass is inherently contrary and will often strike at something which outwardly seems to have no attraction.

Another form of crazy bait which is extensively used is made of two bits of salt pork about an inch square. These are hung on the hooks and cast either among the pads or in open water. It is a bait which should be reeled in swiftly. It stays on top of the water all the time, where it picks up a tremendous bobbery. It may be the disturbances of the water which angers the bass, or perhaps there is something likeable in the appearance of the ungainly lure judged from the bass viewpoint, but the fact is that it takes fish sometimes when even angle worms are of no avail.

Indeed, there are times in the season when bass appear to be lunatics, taking everything they are not supposed to take and leaving untouched that which in sane reason should have charms.

DIXFIELD CENTRE.

The Farm and Garden.

It is a little warmer than it has been and crops are growing finely. Potatoes are looking well and promise a fine crop with but very few bugs to trouble them. Also apples, pears and plums.

Most all fruit will be of better quality this year with less worm holes than usual. In fact the backward late, wet spring with cold nights has been death to the eggs of the potato beetle and the caterpillar.

A few began haying last week. Some think grass not quite grown and will wait till next. With the exception of apples sweet corn is the chief cash crop raised here. Our cheese factory is running, making now six 35 pound cheeses per day or over one ton of milk.

Moses F. Packard has gone to Boston.

Rev. J. P. Barrett preached at the Chapel at 2.30 p. m. last Sunday.

Most all of the people here went to Dixfield to celebrate the 4th of July, and went to Pawnee Bill's Wild West Show at Rumford Falls, the 8th.

Wilmer H. Holman returned from Roxbury last week where he taught a very successful term of school and was offered higher wages in order to induce him to teach there again this fall.

A Cold Summer.

An observant friend of mine said to me the other evening, as we sat half shivering on a piazza facing a sickly sunset sky:

"What's the matter with the planet? Here we are at the summer solstice, in the midst of the longest days of the year, and yet look how short the twilight is. The sun has hardly sunk behind the horizon before it becomes too dark to read and too cold to sit out of doors, while a most unseasonable gloom settles over the landscape. How do you account for it? What has happened? Has the refractive power of the atmosphere undergone a change, perhaps in consequence of the recent cataclysm in the West Indies?"

This is by no means the first time within the past two weeks that I have heard similar questions asked, and the subject is so widely interesting as to be worth some consideration. When our old globe lets its trusting inhabitants go chilly after they have got out their summer gauze and prepared themselves to perspire comfortably under the trees and by the seaside, and when the god of day takes an abrupt departure in the evening and carries his twilight rays away with unmannerly haste, we are within our rights to ask searching questions about the meaning of these things.

As to the facts, there certainly has been of late a noticeable defect of illumination during the evening hours, and this phenomenon has coincided with extraordinarily cool and humid weather in both America and Europe.

Evidently a broad, general cause must be at work to produce effects so widespread. It is no merely local peculiarity of the climate that we now have to deal with, but something of world-wide magnitude.

The brevity of twilight which so many have noticed, and which has imparted a little of the grave aspect of the fall of the year to what should be the brightest, as they are the longest days of summer, is due, I believe, not, as my friend suggested, to any change in atmospheric refraction, but to the unusual prevalence of clouds near the sunset hour, resulting from the untimely chill in the air.

As to the Caribbean convulsions, I do not think they are responsible for the present weather conditions. We must go much further in search of the cause. We must look to the condition of the great dynamo that runs everything on the earth, including even the phenomena of vegetable and animal life—the sun.

The sun is just now in a most unusual state. The period of minimum spottedness has been greatly prolonged, and the history of sun spot eruptions shows that such a prolongation generally, if not invariably, occurs before quick and intense outbreaks of energy at the solar surface.

Accordingly, we must expect that when the sun spots come again they will come rapidly in large numbers and will be of great size and probably accompanied by startling magnetic disturbances and splendid displays of the aurora borealis.

In the meantime the character of the sun's radiation seems to have undergone a temporary change which is reflected in the conditions of the weather. Just what this change is, or just how it reacts upon the earth, we are not yet sufficiently learned in solar secrets to tell.

But we do know that what are ordinarily called light and heat are not the only forms of radiant energy that the sun sheds upon us. Its electro-magnetic influence is hardly yet understood at all, and therein may lie the explanation of cold, gloomy summers and the other freaks of weather and climate which confound the calculations of men.

BOLSTER'S MILLS.

Russ Edwards is with us again working with Billy Jones.

Bertha Holden of Waterford is working for Mrs. Octavia Stuart.

Among the city arrivals we notice Alanson Caswell and wife of Boston.

Lena Hanson has come from Portland to spend a few weeks with her grandmother, Mrs. James Hanson.

The Fourth was quiet here. Several from the Grange met with Casco Grange for a social picnic on Mayberry hill.

Sweet corn in this vicinity looks backward and the many rains do not make haying look very promising to the farmers.

Claude Haskell who is working in South Paris sled factory was at home the 4th. On returning Sunday the horse got into one of the numerous holes in the road smashing the wagon and bruising the horse.

July Wild Flowers.

Mid-Summer Wild Blossoms Gorgeous in Form and Color.

The wild flowers of mid-summer, as a class, seem to lack the frail modesty which characterizes those of the early spring. It is not necessary to hunt for them, as we would for trailing arbutus or hepaticas; they fairly blaze in the woods and by the margins of the ponds and streams and even come out by thousands along the sides of the roads and hail us as we pass. And lucky it is for us that this is so.

Our minds are no longer highly sensitive to every tiny blossom that appears above the ground. We are somewhat jaded; we have been sufeited with delicate beauty and require something more brilliant—more striking—to attract our attention. Then comes this gorgeous pageant of flowers, so wonderful in their form and coloring that they take our thoughts from the heat and the glare and the dust and almost make us forget that the birds are listless and silent.

In our walks at this season, we often almost instinctively choose a path which leads us along a river or the shores of a lake, and here we shall find many of our most beautiful wild flowers. Riding lightly on the surface of the water we shall see the fragrant water-lillies, surrounded by their broad floating leaves and near by perhaps, the less conspicuous yellow lillies. Each of the blossoms is almost sure to contain a certain number of flies and beetles, attracted by the promise of sweets, and unwittingly they act as agents for plants by carrying the golden pollen from flower to flower.

Standing with their feet in the mud along the shore, we shall find many other July flowers. Most beutiful of these is the arrow head, with its three-petaled blossoms of silver and gold, surrounded by a brave array of green arrow shaped leaves. Growing with it and lining the shore as far as the eye can reach we see the striking flowers of the pickerel weed, blue with yellow spots and just behind them the flaming cardinal flowers which, as they are visited in turn by the humming bird, tremble with the vibration of his wings. Above them all dart back and forth the gauzy dragon flies which pause now and then in their occupation of pursuing mosquitoes, to alight upon the stems of water plants. These creatures are as markedly rigid while at rest as they are markedly erratic while in flight.

Back from the river in the wheat fields we may find the corn cockle, one of the handsomest foes of the farmer. With the scarlet poppy this beautiful plant has come over from the grain fields of Europe and its crimson-purple blossoms delight the eye of the artist almost as much as they vex the soul of the agriculturists. The seeds are black, and when ground up in the wheat spoil the snowy whiteness of the flour. As quaint old Gerade remarks, "What hurts it doeth among corns! the spoyle unto bread, as well in color taste and unwholesomness is better known than desired."

If we chance to pass over a piece of land which has lately been burned over, it is not unlikely that we shall see that remarkable wild flower, the fire weed or great yellow herb whose stately purple head will remind us of the tall larkspur at a little distance. Few residents of the garden are as handsome as this and a bed of fire weed would attract attention in any company.

We may still find that wonderful blue flower the wild lupine blooming in the sandy fields, and perhaps it is not too early to find a light blue spike of the great lobelia, growing in the moist border of some low-lying wood. Both these are striking plants, and are among the most beautiful of our wild flowers.

Along the roadside there are flowers in myriads. Prominent is the bouncing bet, a flower at one time much cultivated in gardens but now so common that few recognize its beauty. It came to us from Europe where in the old days its roots was valued as a medicine. The stems and flowers when rubbed vigorously in water produce a soapy lather which accounts for its other common name of soapwort.

Nearly as common is the hop clover whose sulphur-yellow hoplike flowers would scarcely lead us to believe that it belonged to the same family as the red clover so highly prized as fodder. It is the largest of the three foreign yellow clovers which have established themselves in this country. Growing with the hop-clover we often find two other members of the family, low clover which resembles it in appearance and the rabbit-foot clover, a quaint little plant which bears long soft grayish heads which accounts for its name.

That curious scented flower, Oswego Ted, may also be seen in July. This is one of the few of our eastern mints which have flowers both sweet scented and conspicuous in color. Its cardinal-red blossoms relieved by the dark-green foliage may be found in cool shady places. The aromatic leaves still find favor as a medicine in certain places; they are administered in the form of a tea, which is supposed to be a remedy for various maladies.

The wild red lily which is found in the shady woods; the sky-hued bluebell which is found along the roadside; the jimson weed which as often as not flourishes on a rubbish heap and the evening primrose which opens its perfumed yellow blossoms at dusk, are all among the more or less conspicuous July flowers whose striking beauty compels us to turn aside to admire them and thus rest our minds which would otherwise be wearied with the burden and heat of the day.

Children's Corner.

East Waterford, Me., July 13, 1902.

DEAR EDITOR.—As I have never written for the children's corner I thought I would try and write. I am a little girl seven years old. I go to school some of the time when it keeps. I like to go very much. My teacher's name was Annie Jenne. I like her very much. Our school closed the 28th of July. I spoke a piece and was in a dialogue. My sister Mabel is learning me to sew. I am making a dress for my dolly. Well I guess I will close with a conundrum. Why is the letter K like a pig's tail? From your little friend,

ETHEL L. STANLEY.

East Waterford, Me., July 13, 1902.

DEAR EDITOR.—I am a little girl five years old. I have a little brother, Harold James. He is sixteen months old. He likes to go out and play with me. My little sister Gracie and I have lots of fun picking wild flowers for sister Annie. I have an old hen and a flock of chickens which mamma gave me for taking care of them, but sometime I forget to feed them. My sister Ethel was writing. I wanted to write to, so sister Mabel told me she would help me. Well I hope this will escape the waste basket.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, It has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from us Brother Charles E. Stuart; therefore

Resolved, That in the death of Brother Stuart our Lodge loses a worthy member, and the community in which he lived a good citizen.

Resolved, That a copy of these Resolutions be furnished to the relatives of our deceased brother, and spread upon our records, and a copy be sent to the OXFORD COUNTY ADVERTISER for publication.

Riverside cemetery is in excellent condition. A large number of beds of ornamental plants are coming into bloom and a dozen or so of the lots being entitled to perpetual care are in a very neat and tasty condition. L. S. Sessions is doing much other work on the lots being employed there all the time and the whole work shows excellent taste and painstaking care.

An Elaborate Monument.

Tuesday and Wednesday a large number of people visited Riverside Cemetery, where J. F. Bolster of Norway with a large crew of men were setting what is perhaps as showy a monument as to be seen anywhere about except the Thompson mausoleum at Pine Grove.

The monument is of white marble, a cross 4x7 feet rises from the rear of a base about two feet square, and immediately before it is a figure of an angel five feet in height. The figure is most gracefully posed, the wings raised at the height of the arms of the cross, the head slightly bowed, the left hand resting upon the breast and the right gracefully extended downward with a rose between thumb and fingers. On the base is the word "Risen."

This stands upon an American marble base 3 feet, 2 inches square, about 8 inches high, bearing the word "Salisbury," and this in turn is on a granite base four feet square.

The monument was ordered by Mrs. J. K. Salisbury and is upon their lot at the northeastern side of the cemetery. Against the trees it makes a picture to be remembered. It was ordered through a Boston firm and was made in Italy. It was shipped from there in May, and has been some six or eight weeks upon the way. The weight boxed was about two tons, and as set the top of the cross is 9 feet, 6 inches from the ground.

Mr. and Mrs. R. N. Millett of Hanover, Mass., are at the Nathan W. Millett farm. Mercy and Harriett Millett who have been visiting them, returned with them and are at the farm.

Grand marshal Bial F. Bradbury, grand secretary Howard D. Smith and grand master Alfred S. Kimball performed the duties of their offices in the Masonic order at the dedication of new Masonic hall, corner Lisbon and Main streets, Lewiston, last Thursday.

Oscar Kneeland of Harrison sent us, one morning recently, some handsome dahlias grown in his garden. They are five in number, large and perfect. The first blossoms came out, July 6, and from this time forth he will doubtless have an abundance of flowers. He apparently understands dahlia culture.

Rev. A. A. Callaghan preached at the Methodist church Sunday morning, text, Romans 1:16. "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ for it is the power of God unto Salvation." God is the only being that can save a soul. The gospel is power, power unto salvation. Repentance and the new life absolutely essential. Christ saves the whole man. The hope of humanity is in the Gospel. He cited interesting events of church history and the examples of what the gospel has done in foreign and home lands. Mr. Callaghan is a very earnest speaker, able thinker and is one of the most promising young preachers in this vicinity. He attends Cobb Divinity school in Lewiston during the school season.

We have a copy of the Rampart Miner of Alaska. It bears date of June 10, 1902 and in volume 1, No. 39 and the selling price is 25 cents per copy or $6.00 a year. It is published every Monday at the cabin in the rear of the U. S. Land office, Rampart city, Alas. It is a three column 4 paged paper, size of page 8x10½ inches. This copy was sent by Eugene Minard of Alaska, whose parents live on the Gibbs place near the Oxford line. The paper found its way to this office by the kindness of ex-postmaster L. I. Bartlett. Eugene Minard served Uncle Sam in the Cuban war and with his regiment was sent to Alaska to do military duty. He was discharged for disability and has since remained in the country. We notice that bottled beer sells in that far away land at $12.00 per dozen bottles.

The Norway base ball team crossed bats with the West Paris team at the fair grounds, Saturday afternoon, and the home team was defeated 10 to 4. Some delay was caused by the absence of the center fielder on the West Paris team but Carrol Curtis was soon found to be willing to play and it was soon noticed that he had lost none of his base ball abilities. Lowell, the Norway 3d baseman, was also absent, and his place was taken by Harry Morse and he was one of the few to get a base hit each time up. Nevers without practice put up a good game behind the bat and was quite successful with the stick. Rich, the high school pitcher, was in the box for the home term, and controlled his ball very well, as he only gave one base on balls. Shaw and Dwyer was the West Paris battery and did their usual good work. This is one of the best batteries in the state. Batteries, Rich and Nevers, Shaw and Dwyer. Umpire, Rogers. Time, 1.45. Attendance, 125.

We will gladly change the address of your paper as often as you need it changed, so that you may know all the home news promptly.

Please be sure to give both former and new addresses. Failure to do this may cause us a large amount of labor as 2200 names are a large number to look over. Two recent requests caused us more than a half-hour's search to find the name simply because the last address was not given. We may know where it should go and again we may not.

Old Ladies' Home.

MR. EDITOR.—Will you or some correspondent to your paper inform the public if the much talked of old ladies' home in Norway is to be opened for inmates, the coming fall. There is much anxiety and feeling about it in this vicinity, as several elderly ladies desire to find a retreat in it rather than go elsewhere. They are ready to make application as soon as they know for a certainty that the home is to be established, and it is important to them to be assured of its success, but if the scheme has been abandoned they wish to apply elsewhere. Please let us know through your paper what may be the prospect of its establishment and how soon it may be opened for applicants.

ONE THAT IS INTERESTED

If any one knows whether the Home is to be started, this fall, or what the prospect is of its being established, will they please let the public know through the ADVERTISER. We have been unable to find out anything definite about the proposed Home.

Noah's Ark Located.

They are telling a pretty good story about the Grand Trunk. Nearly everybody up this way knows what the present passenger station of that road in Portland is like, and will appreciate the story. At a local minstrel show near Portland the other evening, the question as to what became of the ark after it was abandoned by Noah was propounded. The interlocutor did not know, and finally hurled the question back at the inquisitive end. His answer was that Noah sold it to the Grand Trunk Railway, and that they were using it as a passenger station in Porland.

A Pretty Wedding.

The Austin, Minn. Register gives an account of a wedding that will interest Norway people. The groom being a grandson of Mrs. N. K. Noble of Austin. Mrs. Noble is a sister of Jonathan Blake and formerly lived in Norway.

A pretty home wedding took place Tuesday noon, June 17th, at the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. A. M. Smith, at Austin, Minn., when her daughter, Grace Adeline, was united in marriage to L. N. McWhorter. The ceremony was performed by Rev. E. F. Wheeler in the presence of relatives and a number of the close friends of the bride and groom, including the remnant of the K. K. K's, who witnesses of the departure frem their fold of another member of their club, the majority of whom have taken the matrimonal route to supreme happiness.

The ushers were Annie McBride and Daisy Maxwell, and Bernice Smith, niece of the bride, was ring bearer, the beautiful ring service being used in the nuptials. The bride was dressed in white mull over white taffeta and looked very pretty, and the groom was attired in the conventional black. The bride wore a brooch pin 70 years old, which had been worn by her grandfather and her father at their weddings when they chose "the better part," as Paul, said and became happy benedicts. In the dining room were candlesticks that were used at the marriage of the groom's grandmother, so the past and present were closely linked together by these family relics at the marriage ceremony.

Winnie Belding played the wedding march, and as sweet strains of the music died away, the words were spoken which united two loving hearts for life. Congratulations followed and a wedding breakfast was served in the dining room, which had been tastily brightened by pink carnations for the occasion. The decorations througout the home were both pretty and signficant. The parlor colors were pink and white and the adjoing room were white and green, the whole being arranged with fine effect.

After a brief wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. McWhorter will make their home in Minneapolis, where Mr. McWhorter holds a prominent posititon in the city schools. He was formerly principal of the Austin high school, and is recorgnized throughout the state as an educator of great abiliy and promise. As a recognition of his excellent work in Minneapolis, the school board promoted him and increased his salary $100 without solicitation. He is a gentleman of splendid scholastic attainments, and the people of Austin among whom he has so long made his home and "grew up" to manhood, as it were, hold him in the highest esteem.

The bride is well known and popular in the social circles of the city, her bright and winning ways making her many friends who will join in wishing her future happiness and prosperity.

There are a million little mouths in your skin ready to absorb whatever comes to them. What kind of soap do you feed them? We seldom reckon with the powers of absorption exercised by the pores of the skin, and yet it is possible for these little mouths to take in four quarts of water in twenty-four hours. No wonder impure toilet and bath soaps are so apt to produce skin diseases. You can trust the soaps we sell you. We handle none but worthy brands, and by buying in quantities we are able to make low prices on them.

In the Shelter of the Stripes.

BY JOHN HABBERTON.

The managing committee—Howtree, Beantassel and Runnels—all in their Sunday clothes, and Beantassel with his stepfather's musket, were already on the platform. They doffed their hats to the goddess and her escort and again as the newer states blushed and giggled their way up the platform steps, but when Sam approached Runnels said to Beantassel:

"Look at him. I never saw a finer appearin' young man outside of Virginia."

"Hub!" said Howtree, who had overheard the remark. "He ain't even a patch to the goddess."

Beantassel, watch in hand, made haste to call the platform and general populace to order and to announce the opening prayer. Afterward, although he bowed his head reverently, he kept one eye on his watch to see that the venerable clergyman's patriotism should not cause the prayer to overrun the time allotted to it. No sooner had "amen" sounded than Beantassel sprang to his feet and shouted:

"Readin' of the Declaration of Independence by Samuel Howtree, Esq."

Then he stood aside a moment to contemplate the picture which he credited largely to his own stagecraft. It certainly was impressive. At the platform rail, near the flagstaff and against the eastern glow of dawn, stood Virginia in the glory of her nation's standard and her own beauty, all enhanced by the plain blue gowns and white hats of the thirteen matrons around her. Near the foot of the flagstaff and beside the old anvil which was to be used as a cannon stood Howtree and Runnels, the latter gazing adoringly at the granddaughter, while Howtree feasted his eyes on Sam. As the young man arose and bowed to the goddess, then to the old thirteen and the newer thirty-three and to the multitude, he was in appearance highly creditable to himself and the maker of his new clothes. Beantassel, fearing that the presence of Virginia Runnels might embarrass the reader and fearing also to say what had again and again urged upon Sam the old stage injunction that an actor should always play directly at the person whom he most fears.

Sam had not read more than a few words before Beantassel became satisfied that the principal actors in his little play were entirely equal to their parts, for each looked entirely self possessed and self forgetful; so he caressed the musket of his stepfather and followed the charter of our liberties to pass into one ear and out through the other while he dropped into a reverie dreams of what ought to happen after the curtain fell—that is, after the leading lady and gentleman had left the stage. They looked as if they were made for each other. Nobody, Beantassel told himself, could imagine either of them marrying any one but the other. No one aside from themselves knew why, in earlier years, they had quarreled instead of marrying, and why they had never been brought together again.

"He deserves her," said Beantassel to himself as the reading progressed. "He's unloadin' the Declaration especially at her feet, as if she was a goddess sure enough. I wish she'd look at him a minute, just one minute; but durn her obstinacy, she don't look at him where except across people's heads. An' yet she's hearin' ev'ry word. She couldn't look so all fired killin' hard some if she was thinkin' about herself."

Then he looked at his watch and forward the east. Evidently the sun was very near the horizon, so the reading must be nearing its end. Beantassel had his cue—the closing words "our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor"—and had persuaded Virginia to commit them to memory, so that action might be immediate at the proper instant. But some possibilities had not been taken into account. The morning breeze came in little gusts. The thirteen flag, to which the halyards had already been fastened, was large, and no one had known enough to arrange it in a fashion, to be shaken out when it reached the top of the staff. At Sam's last word Virginia seized the halyards and began to pull, but the flag, flapping outward, exerted a force which was too much even for the strength of a young woman whose arms had not lacked exercise.

Sam sprang quickly to the girl's assistance, and he was so little quicker than she that his hands seemed to come upon her own. "Bang!" went the old anvil, the fife and drum struck up "The Star Spangled Banner," the people cheered, and Beantassel brought the musket of his stepfather to the position of "present arms," when a wild puff of the contrary wind wrapped and twisted the great flag around the goddess and her volunteer assistant.

Beantassel dropped the musket of Revolution and tugged at the lee of the flag. After some seconds of frantic effort he, but he alone, suddenly perceived Virginia in Sam's arms and being kissed as industriously as if the raising were something that might be attended to at any time in the indefinite future.

"Why don't you unloose that flag?" roared Howtree from beside the anvil.

"I'm doin' it as fast as I can," Beantassel loudly as he put all his weight on the sacred rag and his feet firmly about the couple.

"Bang!" roared the anvil again, and there was such a commotion with the flag that Beantassel was obliged to loose his hold. The capricious wind did the rest—the flag floated free and closed the two figures with their backs on the halyards. Beantassel, having seized the musket of his stepfather, brought it to the saluting position and he also emitted a wild yell and began to dance a jig and to otherwise comport himself in a manner entirely out of keeping with the dignity of the occasion.

"Look at her! Look at Virginia!" exclaimed Runnels.

"Look at her! Look at Virginia!" exclaimed Runnels.

"Look to that touchhole!" retorted Howtree. "Do you want my hands to be blowed off?"

"Pahdon me, suh," replied Runnels, feeling with his thumb for the touchhole, but keeping his eyes fixed upon his granddaughter, "but gentlemen have been willin' to risk their heads bein' blown off for less satisfyin' sights than that."

"Please don't imagine that I'm a-missin' any of it," said Howtree.

"How could you?" murmured Virginia to Sam, her eyes looking heavenward, yet with all of heaven in her face.

"My hands happened to rest on yours, darlin'," replied Sam softly as he continued to haul up the flag, "an' there was more than ten years of waitin' in 'em, an'—you know the rest."

Meanwhile Beantassel's ecstasy had been intensifying. The play—his play, which he had dreamed out—had been a grand success thus far, but the best thing in it had been seen only by himself, the sun and the angels. A good play should have a strong denouement before as many spectators as possible. As the flag reached the top of the staff and Sam made the halyards fast to a cleat and Virginia replaced the liberty cap that the capricious flag had snatched from her, Beantassel dropped the musket of his stepfather and whispered excitedly to the minister; then he and the minister approached Sam and Virginia, to whom Beantassel said:

"Why don't you unloose that flag?" roared Howtree.

"Folks as high strung an' proud as you two oughtn't to run the risk of gettin' separated again. You're both of age. There's no marriage license required in this state. What do you say?"

Sam seemed to grow several inches while he extended his hands, into which Virginia slowly placed her own as she dropped her eyes.

"The forty-six states will please rise up!" shouted Beantassel; then he leaned over the rail and yelled:

"Howtree! Runnels! Come up here, both of you, quick!"

The two old men obeyed the order and then stared wildly at each other as they heard the minister say:

"I pronounce you man and wife. What God hath joined together let not man put asunder."

"Except for a second," said Howtree, pushing his son aside and taking his new daughter in his arms.

"And another," said Runnels, taking Virginia from Howtree and pressing his lips to her forehead.

"And one more, even if Sam kills me for it," said Beantassel, kissing the bride on both cheeks. "I reckon this match was made all principally by me, an' the Bible says the laborer is worthy of his hire."

Then the forty-six states precipitated themselves upon Virginia, while Howtree and Runnels, arm in arm, like two schoolgirls, walked aside and talked to each other until a villager who was a stickler for regularity went upon the platform and complained that the national salute to the flag had not been completed.

"You're dead wrong," said Beantassel. "That flag got more salutes, an' better ones, an' right inside of itself, than any other flag in the world ever got. I heerd 'em—yes, an' I seed 'em too."

"I don't understand you."

"Don't, eh? Well, I s'pose not. Better ask Sam here. He can tell you all about it if he will."

Meanwhile the forty-six states had been dispersing and resolving themselves into news bearers, so within five minutes every one in Farway knew that Sam and Virginia had been married, and the general astonishment was so great that the pails of coffee and tea were forgotten and only the small boys paid any attention to the trays of sandwiches that had been brought to the grounds. Every one hurried up to congratulate a couple that were too dazed and happy to show a trace of the embarrassment peculiar to newly married people.

Then Beantassel proposed and organized a wedding procession which everybody joined and of which Beantassel, with his stepfather's musket on his shoulder, took command. Around the bride and groom he arranged the forty-six states as a guard of honor, with Howtree, Runnels and the minister directly behind them, the villagers to follow as they liked. Placing the Grand Army's fifer and drummer in front, he told them to strike up a wedding march the instant he should give the command "forward."

"That beats us," said the fifer. "We don't know any wedding march."

"Considering all that's happened today, Mr. Beantassel," said Sam Howtree, "why wouldn't 'The Star Spangled Banner' be about the thing?"

"Of course. Forward, march!"

The happy couple were escorted by devious ways, so that the few persons confined to their homes by sickness could see them, to the home of the bride, on the piazza of which they were compelled to stand until the village photographer had taken a picture and all the girls had secured bits of the bride's patriotic attire in lieu of the traditional bride cake.

After the festivities of the day had ended and the three originators sat smoking together at Howtree's front door Beantassel said:

"Well, boys, we wanted to get up a celebration that would be remembered for all time, an' I reckon we done it."

"We?" echoed Runnels gently. "I don't see that we did anything, but my Virginia"—

"An' my Sam," added Howtree quickly. "Between the two of 'em they done it all."

Beantassel knocked the ashes from his pipe so vigorously that the stem broke as he said:

"They did, did they? Well, all I've got to say is that you're mightily mistaken if you think it was doin' nothin' to hold a twenty-four foot flag from flappin' loose from two young people that's so took up with each other that they won't do nothin' to help you."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

A "Thingamajig."

Here is the letter sent by a Topeka man with a present to a bride in Chicago: "My Dear Girl—You will find in the box a thingamajig which has something to do with eating grub off a table. I don't know what it is. It looks like a cross between a harpoon and a hayfork. It may be for spearing pickles, or it may be for stacking chopped cabbage. I am so old-fashioned that I don't know; you will be so happy you won't care.

More Fame for Maine.

Representative Powers of Maine was coming down through the Capital grounds when he was stopped by a lady who was examining minutely a small magnolia tree.

"Will you be so kind," said the lady, as to tell me what kind of a tree this is?"

"That, madame, replied Representative Powers, in a most courtly manner, "is a lemon tree."

"Dear me, said the lady, "are you sure? I never saw a lemon tree before."

"Quite sure, madam. There are great groves of them in my state."

"And what is your state, if I may ask?"

"Maine, madam."

"Why I never knew lemon trees grew in Maine?"

"Madam, said Representative Powers, bowing low, "lack of knowledge simply affords me the ineffable pleasure of imparting to you the information. Besides, the resources of the great State of Maine are too little exploited in these days of commercial rush and hurry."

Then he walked on and the lady took a twig from the magnolia as a souvenir.

Fresh from the Furrow.

"The best men in Georgia," said the farmer to his son, "came right from the plow."

"That's whar I wants to come from," was the reply, an' durn quick, too!"

Quiet Recreation.

One holiday a young man thought in order to properly observe the occasion he must get drunk, and he proceeded to do so. Like all people under like circumstances he wanted everybody in town to know about it, so after he got to that stage where he was not very lively he seated himself in an easy chair in front of a large window, on the main street, and sat upright with his head dropped forward on his breast. His wife was a brave little woman, but even she felt that this was a little too much, that the small world about him was regarding him with disgust and she must be loyal. "Poor fellow," she said, "he has to work so hard he must have some recreation."

Too Late.

"Who made God?"

"Ah, Billy! You would not have asked that question in your sophomore year. You'd have known."

Not Sold by the Glass.

"I bet you can't buy a single glass of plain water," said one man to another.

"Taken," was the reply.

They marched to a place where drinks were sold.

"Give us a couple of glasses of water," sharply said the man who had made the bet.

"Vichy or seltzer?" inquired the dealer.

"Neither. Give us a couple of glasses of plain water, and look sharp about it—we're in a hurry to catch a train."

There was an expression of acute astonishment on the dealer's face by this time. "Plain water?" he inquired? What d'ye mean by that?"

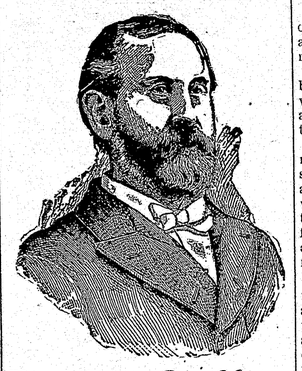
NOW IN NORWAY.



Prof. Coffey

THE GREAT HEALER

Who created such a furore of excitement in Lewiston, Auburn, Bath, Augusta and Bangor recently by curing hundreds of all manner of diseases thought to be incurable. Is now at the Elm House, Norway, Me., will remain some time. Consultation free until July 24, from 9 a. m. till 8 p. m. daily.

Professor Coffey, the celebrated specialist, and famous natural healer, is the same gifted man who stood on the open stage of Journal Hall, Lewiston, quite recently and publicly cured hundreds of people in the presence of thousands of their astonished neighbors, causing much enthusiasm.

Prof. Coffey is a man of charming presence, of unusual physical strength and magnetic power. No such man has visited this place before.

Prof. Coffey does not resort to the use of dangerous medecines to produce these marvelous results. He, (by the simple laying on of the hands,) transmits the vital force of the afflicted person's brain to the defective parts of their bodies and the result in many cases is obstained in a moment of time. Nine cases out of ten any curable disease can be controlled by a few treatments.

His magic touch makes the blind to see, the deaf to hear, the crippled to walk, and the sick and suffering to rejoice and call down blessings on his head.

Now is your opportunity to get the opinion of an expert free. Professor Coffey has cured to stay cured thousands of cases of rheumatism and paralysis and firmly believes he can cure you. He has affected a permanent cure of stubborn cases in a few days time. James Kiskarden had been laid up for seven months with rheumatism, could not even dress or undress himself. Professor Coffey cured him in four days. W. J. Hepford had not walked across the floor for nine months on account of rheumatism. In one week after receiving his first treatment he walked two miles. Miss Emma Blodget had not raised her right arm to her head for over a year being paralized. In two weeks after receiving her first treatment she went to work cured.

A lady who has received treatment reports that this is the first week in three years she has not suffered from rheumatism. She declares that the three treatments she received from Professor Coffey was worth a thousand dollars to her.

Hundreds of people in New England who were deaf had their hearing permanently restored by Prof. Coffey; others their eyesight. Many apparently hopeless paralytics have been permanently benefited so that they are enabled to earn their livings.

Prof. Coffey's method of healing is not an experiment, it is scientific in every way and has passed the experimental stage.

It is neither mesmerism, hypnotism, Christian Science, mind or faith cure although it has been classed with these things by those who have heard of but never investigated.

Many who have been treated and cured by Professor Coffey declare that it matters not what your ailment may be, if there is any cure for you in this world the professor will permanently cure you. By a single treatment he often gets results that could not be obtained in any other way.

Here every case is examined and if a cure is possible, you are as sure of it as you are of the sun rising. If, however, you are beyond relief, no amount of money would induce the professor to accept your case. He heals the sick, and cures those who are diseased, and he does it upon scientific principles.

Marvelous as his work may appear, he he is simply doing that which history and the teachings of science show has been and can be done, and that which well informed men know can be done and is being done in this age. His work has been successful and most magnificently successful.

His wonderful success has spread like wild-fire among those who had given up all hope of ever being well again, and they are by hundreds availing themselves of his miraculous power and gift of healing, which has proved to be the surest, quickest and most reliable means of cure ever offered a long suffering public.

All important cases should book their names at once, as it gives preference over others.

There is scarcely a disease that will not succumb to the magic hands of Prof. Coffey. Along the whole category of human ills, such as catarrh, pulmonary complaints, liver and kidney troubles, paralysis and all diseases of the nervous system, tumors and goitres removed without the knife or the loss of a drop of blood, all stomach disturbances, spinal and cerebral disorders, female weaknesses of all descriptions, rheumatism in all its forms, such as rheumatic gout, inflamatory rheumatism, swelling and inflamation of the joints, deafness and all diseases of the ear and eye, no matter what the trouble may be, there is hope as long as Prof. Coffey is around.

To avoid afternoon and evening crowd, call as early in the day and week as possible.

Preserve this for reference as it may not appear again. If you are not afflicted please hand it to some one who is. 28-29

An explosion of fire damp in a coal mine in Johstown, Pa., resulted in the death of two hundred or more miners, some of whom were of a party trying to rescue those imperilled.

Summer Breakfasts.

The breakfast in midsummer is a serious problem in many households, for appetites are very capricious on a sultry morning.

Whenever it is possible, let the meal be served out-of-doors, on a piazza, or with dining-room windows wide open and some fresh ferns or flowers near the table.

Then by all means drop from the menu the grosser meats, for however suitable these were in December, they are out of place in July. Fruit, cereal with cream, eggs and muffins are enough to sustain any one through a summer forenoon. When eggs pall, as they will occasionally, a relish of ham, bacon, salt fish or herring may be substituted.

Fish Souffle.—A fish souffle can be made from a foundation of chopped fish and potato, or from the fish mixed with mashed potato, or with a thick cream sauce, or with with a paste of breadcrumbs and milk. Which ever foundation is used, combine with each cup of the mixture one egg, yolk and white beaten separately. That is, for three cups of creamed fish well seasoned take three eggs, beat the yolks thoroughly and mix with the fish, then beat the whites stiff and fold into the mixture as eggs are folded into sponge cake. Bake in rather a moderate oven until puffy and brown, but do not let it get too dry. It may be baked in one dish, but can be done more quickly and is rather more delicate cooked in individual portions in scallop shells, paper cases, or ramekins.

A generous saucer of berries, some good muffins, and a glass of milk, or a cup of coffee is a combination that would satisfy many persons at breakfast time better than chops or steak, fried potatoes and griddle cakes, and leave them in better condition to work.

Mush Muffins.—One cup of milk scalded, one cup of outmeal or rather cooked cereal, one tablespoonful of sugar, one teaspoon of butter, one-half teaspoon of salt, one-quarter of a yeast cake, about one pint of flour. Mix thoroughly, let rise over night or till very light, then beat well and put in gem pans. Let them rise till double in bulk, and then bake for about half an hour.

Rice Muffins.—One pint of flour, one-half teaspoon of salt, two teaspoons of baking powder, one-fourth cup each of sugar and butter rubbed into the flour, two eggs, yolks and whites beaten separately, and one cup of milk.

If blueberries are added, use a trifle less liquid or a spoonful more flour, since the berries are mainly water.

All flour and meal are measured after sifting, then sifted again with the salt, baking powder, or soda, etc. Old recipes often direct us to dissolve soda in the sour milk, but some of the gas is lost if that is done.

Rye Muffins.—One cup of rye meal, one cup of flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt, two teaspoons of baking powder, one tablespoon of sugar, one beaten egg, one cup of sweet milk.

Corn Cake.—Three-fourths of a cup each of corn meal and flour, one teaspoon each of salt and soda, one tablespoon of sugar, one beaten egg, one cup of sour milk.

Brown Bread.—Sift together one cup of corn meal, one cup of rye meal (or graham, whole wheat or wheat flour), one-half teaspoon of salt, and one scant teaspoonful of soda. Mix with one-half cup of molasses, and one cup of thick sour milk. If the meal is very coarse use a trifle less or add a few spoonfuls of water. Put in a greased tin, with or without cover, and steam for three or four hours. When sour milk is not available use one-fourth teaspoon of soda to neutralize the acid of the molasses, and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. If more convenient to bake than to steam, the can containing the bread may be covered and put on a trivet in a larger can or pail, in which put a pint of boiling water and cover closely. With tight fitting covers on both cans the bread is in no danger of burning. The effect of the outside can of water is the same on the loaf of brown bread as the use of a steam-cooker.

This is also an excellent way to reheat brown bread. A quicker way is to slice it, spread it on pans, and put it in a quick oven for a few minutes, piling the slices evenly together as soon as heated through.—[Anna Barrows in American Kitchen Magazine.

Mr. Lewis practically introduced this great religious festival to the American public. From 1890 to 1900, he gave the illustrated story two thousand times and in all sections of the country, thereby winning for himself the title, "The Apostle of the Passion Play." It has been truthfully said by many, even by those who have visited Oberammergau, "No matter how many times one may have listened to representations and descriptions of the Play, yet, until one has heard Mr. Lewis' story and looked upon his views, one has never really seen the real Passion Play."

BETHEL.

Fell from the Train.

Coroner A. W. Grover was called to Hastings, last Friday, to take charge of the body of Edward Keenan who was killed by falling from the log train and six loaded cars passing over his body. The head was severed completely from the body and thrown six or eight feet away. The investigation attached no blame to any one. Keenan was the brakeman on the train of eight loaded cars, which was hauling round logs from the woods to the mill. They had approached within about three-fourths of a mile of the mill and running about eight miles an hour when the accident happened. Rob Bennett, the fireman, was the only one who saw that anything was wrong, and so slight was his view of the scene that he said a log had fallen off when he called to the engineer to stop, but next noticed that Keenan, who was on the car, was missing. The body was lying between the two last cars when the train had stopped. Keenan was 24 years old, a good workman and thought well of by his fellow laborers. He leaves a wife and one child and many relatives and friends to mourn his untimely death. The body was taken to Berlin, N. H., the next day for burial.
